

HEAD OF RESEARCH

The Swedish Institute of International Affairs (UI) is recruiting a Head of Research

Are you interested in developing and leading the Research Department at the Swedish Institute of International Affairs (UI)?

During the past year the Institute has entered into a dynamic new phase. A central part of our vision is a strong Research Department, based on policy-relevant research. The Head of Research, in consultation with the Director, will lead UI's research efforts, further develop the Research Department, identify partners, and build synergy between the different research programs.

The Head of Research is expected to represent UI and UI's research externally, and be responsible for UI's research publications. The Head of Research sits on the Management Committee. The Head of Research will be able to conduct research for 50% of work time.

We are looking for a well-qualified candidate with good knowledge of the Swedish research community. The applicant should have reached at least the level of docent, be widely published, possess strong leadership qualifications, have a good track record of obtaining external funding and have broad experience in financial management. Good proficiency in Swedish is considered a merit.

Closing date for applications: October 21, 2011

The Swedish Institute of International Affairs (UI) is a non-profit organization founded in 1938. UI is an independent institute for research and analysis on foreign affairs. UI is also an impartial platform for information and debate on current foreign affairs and international issues. UI, together with The Swedish National Defence College, is responsible for the Anna Lindh Library for defense, foreign affairs, and security policy.

UI's mission is to enrich the debate on foreign affairs by promoting interest and knowledge on foreign affairs issues. Through the UI blog, publications, participation in international networks, and the Anna Lindh Library, UI actively contributes to a broad dissemination of knowledge on international politics and conditions in the world. UI takes a broad perspective on international relations. However, we emphasize foreign and security policy issues of concern to Sweden.
